

CONTRIBUTORS

JANICE CHESTERS co-ordinates the Master of Rural Health program at the Monash University Centre for Rural Health, and teaches Health Sociology at Monash's Churchill campus. She combines a theoretical and research interest in all aspects of rural mental health. Janice is chairperson of the Special Needs Access Program, a psychiatric disability support service operating in East Gippsland.

LAURIE GUY is a Lecturer in Church History at Carey Baptist College and an honorary lecturer in Theology at the University of Auckland. He has recently submitted for examination his doctoral thesis, which is entitled Worlds in Collision: The Gay Debate in New Zealand 1960-86.

CLAIRE HOOKER is Senior Research Associate with the History and Material Culture of Public Health in Australia Project, a collaborative venture between the University of Sydney and the Powerhouse Museum. Her work concerns the history of Australian science and medicine, and her most recent publications explore various aspects of diphtheria and typhoid fever control, immunisation, and pasteurisation. She is the co-editor with Alison Bashford of Contagion: Historical and Cultural Studies, Routledge & Pluto Press, London & Sydney, forthcoming 2001.

CECILY HUNTER is completing a PhD on the history of geriatrics and gerontology in Victoria. She organises the History of Medicine Working Group at the Centre for the Study of Health and Society, University of Melbourne.

JENNY LEWIS is a National Health and Medical Research Council Post Doctoral Fellow at the Centre for the Study of Health and Society, University of Melbourne. Her particular research interests are public policy (especially health policy), governance, and inter-organisational networks and the professions. Lewis' most recent publications have been on policy-making, changing modes of governance, and the establishment and use of networks in service delivery.

REGINALD MAGEE is a Clinical Associate Professor in the Department of Surgery at the University of Queensland and, until recently, was the Senior Visiting Vascular Surgeon at the Princess Alexandra Hospital in Brisbane. He has published papers on clinical studies in vascular surgery and on various aspects of surgical history. Magee is currently working on the activities of the anatomists in London and Edinburgh in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries.

JANET McCALMAN is based at the Centre for the Study of Health and Society and teaches in the History and Philosophy of Science Department at the University of Melbourne. Her most recent publication is Sex and Suffering: Women's Health and a Women's Hospital.

SUZANNE PARRY teaches in the Faculty of Education at the Northern Territory University. She has published widely on the history of both Indigenous and tropical health in Australia.

BRIAN REID is a medical practitioner based in Darwin, Northern Territory.

JOHN M. STANHOPE, OAM, was the Medical Superintendent of Sydney's The Langton Centre from 1980–1996, and since then has been the Staff Specialist in Addictions at the Langton/Sydney Hospital. Prior to this he worked as an Epidemiologist in New Zealand and in Papua New Guinea.

SUSAN WATTS, a medical geographer, was a visiting scholar at the Key Centre for Women's Health, University of Melbourne, in February to April 2000. She first encountered guinea worm while teaching at the University of Ilorin, Nigeria, 1979–84. Since 1990 she has been a researcher at the Social Research Center, American University in Cairo.

DIANA WYNDHAM has a PhD in History from the University of Sydney. She is the current holder of the Norman Haire Fellowship, which the University's Faculty of Medicine awarded her in 1998. She writes widely on women and health and her publications include Populate and Perish: Australian Women's Fight for Birth Control, which she co-wrote with Stefania Siedlecky supported by a Bicentennial Grant. Diana is currently working on a history of Norman Haire.