

Contributors

WARWICK H. ANDERSON is the Robert Turell Professor of Medical History and Population Health, and Chair of the Department of Medical History and Bioethics, at the University of Wisconsin–Madison. His book The Cultivation of Whiteness: Science, Health and Racial Destiny in Australia was published in 2002 by Melbourne University Press (and Basic Books, New York, 2003).

YOLANDE COLLINS is co-ordinator of Social Research, Planning and Development at La Trobe University, Bendigo. She lectures in the history and sociology of health and illness, regional history, heritage studies, and social research. Her doctoral research was concerned with the development of public hospitals in country Victoria from the 1840s to the 1940s. She has written two books, Aprons and Arches: A History of Bendigo Hospital Trained Nurses from 1883 to 1989 (with Sandra Kippen), and (with Mike Butcher) An American on the Goldfields: The 1861 Bendigo Photographs of Benjamin Pierce Batchelder.

ROBERT EVANS became a staff specialist paediatrician at the Royal Newcastle Hospital in 1964 and later worked in community paediatrics. On retirement he enrolled in the History Department of the University of Newcastle, and in 2000 successfully completed a PhD thesis, Paediatrics in NSW 1945 to 1965. He saw only the end of McCaffrey's regime at Newcastle, but has had many opportunities to hear the reminiscences of both McCaffrey's admirers and detractors.

JUDITH GODDEN is a historian and senior lecturer in the Faculty of Nursing at the University of Sydney. Her research focuses on nursing, welfare and women's history. She is writing a biography of Lucy Osburn, for which she received the C. H. Currey Fellowship from the State Library of NSW during 2002. She is vice-president of the ASHM, president of the NSW Society of the History of Medicine, and convenor of the inaugural symposium of the Australian Nursing History Group to be held in Newcastle, NSW, in July 2004.

SANDRA A. KIPPEN is course co-ordinator for the Bachelor of Public Health at La Trobe University, Bendigo. Her teaching area is within the disciplines of sociology and ethics, and, in particular, research methods, while her research interests include historical sociology, disability and mental health and illness. Her Masters thesis, The Silent Disaster: Miners' Phthisis in Bendigo, discussed the social and political issues related to mining disease. She has also published a number of articles looking at occupational health and safety issues in mining.

PETER A. LEGGAT is an associate professor in the School of Public Health and Tropical Medicine, James Cook University, Townsville. Currently president of the Australasian College of Tropical Medicine, he is also an Honorary Fellow of St Margaret's College, University of Otago, Dunedin, New Zealand. He is currently travelling on a Fulbright Scholarship in the USA.

SUSAN LEMAR is a lecturer in twentieth-century Australian history in the Department of History at the University of Adelaide. She has also worked as a research associate in linguistics and published in psychiatry. Her historical interests include the development of policy for the control of sexual behaviour and the mentally ill, as well as labour history and the social history of South Australia.

RUTH MORLEY is a senior research fellow in the Department of Paediatrics at The University of Melbourne. Her research focus is on the association between exposures in foetal and infant life and later markers of cardiovascular disease risk.

SUZANNE PARRY is a senior lecturer at Northern Territory University, and has a long research interest in leprosy in Australia. She is currently researching postwar Indigenous health issues and assimilation.

VIRGINIA THORLEY is currently enrolled as a PhD student in the Department of History, University of Queensland. Her MA was on infant feeding advice received by Queensland mothers in the postwar period, 1945–65. As Virginia Phillips, she is the author of Successful Breastfeeding (NMAA) and Feeding Baby and Child: A Guide for Australian Parents (Hyland House). She is a lactation consultant, and has special interests in self-help groups in the health area.

MICHAEL TYQUIN is a Sydney-based consulting historian. Author of several books and articles, he has a primary interest in Australian social and medical history. His latest work is a centenary history of the Royal Australian Army Medical Corps, published in July 2003.