

Contributors

IAN ANDERSON is Director of the Centre for the Study of Health and Society and the VicHealth Koori Health Research and Community Development Unit at the University of Melbourne's School of Population Health. He is also the Research Director of the recently established Cooperative Research Centre (CRC) for Aboriginal Health.

ALISON BASHFORD is a Senior Lecturer the University of Sydney's School of Philosophical and Historical Inquiry. She is author of Purity and Pollution: Gender, Embodiment and Victorian Medicine (1998) and Imperial Hygiene: A Critical History of Colonialism, Nationalism and Public Health (forthcoming). She has also co-edited Contagion (2001) with Claire Hooker, and Isolation: Places and Practices of Exclusion with Carolyn Strange, which is soon to be published by Routledge.

YOLANDE COLLINS is Coordinator of an area of study called Social Research, Planning and Development at La Trobe University in Bendigo. She lectures in the history and sociology of health and illness, regional history, heritage studies and social research. Her doctoral research was concerned with the development of public hospitals in country Victoria from the 1840s to the 1940s. She has co-authored two books, Aprons and Arches: A History of Bendigo Hospital Trained Nurses from 1883 to 1989 (with Sandra Kippen), and An American on the Goldfields: The 1861 Bendigo Photographs of Benjamin Pierce Batchelder (with Mike Butcher).

DU LIPING is a Lecturer in the Chinese Program of the Melbourne Institute of Asian Languages and Societies, the University of Melbourne. His research interests are in the areas of markets and marketing of traditional medicines and indigenous medical culture in China, particularly in Hebei province and Guangxi province.

ROBIN HAINES is a Senior Research Fellow at Flinders University. She has published numerous articles on health and disease at sea from the seventeenth to the twentieth centuries; her books include Emigration and the Labouring Poor: Australian Recruitment in Britain and Ireland (1997), Life and Death in the Age of Sail: The Passage to Australia (2003), and Charles Trevelyan and the Great Irish Famine (2004).

SARAH HOWARD is a Project Officer at the Australian Academy of the Humanities. Her research interests are in the history of gynaecology, and the popularisation of hormone theory and hormone-based medicines in Australia and the United States.

CECILY HUNTER completed a doctorate in 2003 on the development of geriatric medicine in Victoria, in the Department of History and Philosophy of Science at the University of Melbourne. She is continuing to pursue an interest in the organisation of medical knowledge in relation to chronic illness and disability as a Research Fellow at the University of Melbourne's Centre for the Study of Health and Society.

SUSAN LEMAR is a Lecturer in twentieth-century Australian history in the School of History and Politics at the University of Adelaide. Her historical interests include the development of policy for the control of sexual behaviour and the mentally ill, as well as labour history and the social history of South Australia. Susan has also taken on research projects in psychiatry and linguistics, and published in all these areas.

STEFANIA SIEDLECKY, AM, spent thirty years as a doctor in general practice and gynaecology. She was also a Consultant and Senior Advisor in Family Planning and Women's Health in the Commonwealth Department of Health, 1974–86. Since 1989, she has been a Honorary Research Associate in the Department of Business at the School of Economic and Financial Studies, Macquarie University. Her publications include Populate and Perish—Australian Women's Fight for Birth Control (with Diana Wyndham, 1990), as well as articles and book chapters on women's health and family planning.

RALPH SHLOMOWITZ is Reader in Economic History at Adelaide's Flinders University. His research includes the economics of coercive labour systems, mortality and migration, and an anthropometric history of India. Much of his research on health and anthropometric history has been conducted with colleagues Robin Haines, Lance Brennan and John McDonald. He has recently started a new research project on the economics of child labour in Australia.

BARRY SMITH is a Visiting fellow to the History Program in the Research School of Social Sciences at the Australian National University, Canberra.

PETER J. TYLER is an independent professional historian. He is President of the NSW Society of the History of Medicine, and newsletter editor for the Australian Society of the History of Medicine. He is currently writing volume two of the Administrative History of the New South Wales Government, to be published in 2006 to mark the sesquicentenary of responsible government in Australia.

MARK VEITCH is a Public Health Physician in the Department of Microbiology and Immunology at the University of Melbourne. His interests and activities include surveillance and control of vaccine-preventable diseases, food-borne diseases, gonorrhoea and tuberculosis.

JOHN WALLER was educated at Oxford and London Universities and has been lecturing at the University of Melbourne since July 2003. He has a joint appointment with the Centre for the Study of Health and Society and the Department of History and Philosophy of Science, and is currently lecturing both on the history of evolutionary theory and the history of medicine. He is the author of Fabulous Science: Fact and Fiction in the History of Scientific Discovery (Oxford University Press, 2002), and The Discovery of the Germ (Icon Books, 2002). His third book, entitled Heroes and Villains: The Making of Scientific Reputations, will be published later in 2004.