

Contributors

WARWICK ANDERSON is the Robert Turell Professor of Medical History and Population Health, and Chair of the Department of Medical History and Bioethics, at the University of Wisconsin–Madison. He is also a Professorial Fellow in the School of Population Health at the University of Melbourne. In 2005–06 he will be the Frederick Burkhardt Fellow at the Institute for Advanced Study, Princeton. In early 2006, Duke University Press will publish his book Colonial Pathologies: American Tropical Medicine and Racial Hygiene in the Philippines.

LINDA BRYDER is Associate Professor in the History Department of the University of Auckland. She has published widely on the social history of health and medicine in twentieth-century Britain and New Zealand, specifically on tuberculosis and infant health. She is currently researching the history of National Women's Hospital, Auckland.

JANET BUTLER is a postgraduate student in History at La Trobe University. In late 2003 she was awarded the Audrey Harrison Commemorative Fellowship by the Australian Federation of University Women, Queensland Branch, in support of her work. For her consideration of Sister Kit McNaughton's voyage to war, given as a paper at the biennial Australian Historical Association conference, she received the 2004 Ken Inglis Postgraduate Prize.

JANICE CHESTERS is Deputy Director of the Monash University Centre for Multi-Disciplinary Studies in Rural Health. Her primary research interest is in the historical and contemporary provision of rural mental health and illness services.

DANNY DAWSON currently holds a research fellowship at Oxford Brookes University. After investigating the witch-hunts in Britain and Europe 1560–1650 for his PhD, his interest has focused on commemoration and remembrance about World War I. He is continuing his work undertaken at Cambridge University on the Anzacs and still resides in the remarkable village of Harefield.

MICHAEL DOWSETT served in the Royal Australian Navy for more than thirty years, retiring in the rank of Commodore as Director General of Naval Health Services, the first non-medically qualified graduate to hold this position. His interest in naval history and in medical services has resulted in the publication of a number of articles in a variety of journals.

JULIE FINUCANE is the Nurse Unit Manager in the Emergency Department at Princess Alexandra Hospital, Brisbane. She is also an Australian Defence Force part-time nurse, Lieutenant Colonel and the Deputy Head of Corps of the Royal Australian Army Nursing Corps. She is the Executive Director of the College of Emergency Nursing Australasia Ltd.

ROSALIND HEARDER completed her History PhD in 2003 at the University of Melbourne, on the roles and experiences of the 106 Australian medical officers in Japanese captivity during World War II. She has taught at the University of Melbourne in various history subjects, and written two websites for the Australian War Memorial on Australians in France in 1918 and the Korean War. She is currently based at the Australian National University working as part of a team on the Official History of Australian Peacekeeping and Post-Cold War Operations.

MARINA LARSSON is a PhD candidate in the History Program at La Trobe University. Her thesis, 'Returned Soldiers and Disability in Australia 1914–1939', explores the meanings of war disability for disabled soldiers and their families from the moment of wounding to the war-related deaths of returned men in the decades after the armistice. Marina completed a MA at the University of Melbourne in 1997, and her current research interests include the history of disability, the history of masculinity and the cultural history of the Great War.

TIM MARJORIBANKS is the T. R. Ashworth Senior Lecturer in Sociology at the University of Melbourne. His publications include News Corporation, Technology and the Workplace: Global Strategies, Local Change (Cambridge, 2000) and articles in such journals as Journal of Health and Social Behavior, Social Science and Medicine and Journal of Sociology.

JOHN PEARN is Professor of Paediatrics and Child Health at the Royal Children's Hospital in Brisbane. He is also a Councillor of the International Society of the History of Medicine, and a past president and Honorary Life Member of the Australian Society of the History of Medicine.

MIRANDA SIEMIENOWICZ is a student with the Faculties of Medicine, Dentistry and Health Sciences and of Arts at the University of Melbourne. Her research focus is on the conflicting portrayals of Paracelsus and his work, in the century following his death through to the present day.

PETER STANLEY is Principal Historian at the Australian War Memorial, where he has worked since 1980. He has published eighteen books, mostly in British and Australian military history, including For Fear of Pain: British Surgery 1790–1850, which was published in Editions Rodopi's Cliomedica series in 2003. He is a Visiting Associate Professor in the School of Humanities and Social Sciences at the Australian Defence Force Academy.

PETER J. TYLER is an independent professional historian who is President of the NSW Society of the History of Medicine. His PhD thesis was a revisionist history of the NSW Board of Health. He has been commissioned to write volume two of the Administrative History of the New South Wales Government, which will be published in 2006 for the sesqui-centenary of responsible government in Australia.

JOHN C. WALLER is a Lecturer in the History of Science and Medicine in the Department of History and Philosophy of Science and the Centre for the Study of Health and Society at the University of Melbourne. His most recent book is Leaps in the Dark: The Making of Scientific Reputations (Oxford University Press, 2004).

JOHN WILLIAMSON is a retired anaesthetist and diving and hyperbaric medicine physician. He is a graduate of both the University of Queensland and the University of Melbourne. He is presently working part-time as a Consultant Specialist in the Australian Patient Safety Foundation in Adelaide.