

Contributors

W. R. ALBURY holds the honorary position of adjunct professor at the University of New England (UNE), Armidale, NSW. He retired from UNE at the end of 2004 after serving first as dean of the Faculty of Arts and then as pro vice-chancellor (Academic). Prior to those appointments he was professor of history and philosophy of science at the University of New South Wales. He was the founding president of the NSW Society of the History of Medicine, and is a past president of the Australian Society of the History of Medicine.

ALISON BASHFORD lectures in the School of Philosophical and Historical Inquiry at the University of Sydney. She has published widely in the cultural history of modern medicine, most recently with Imperial Hygiene: A Critical History of Colonialism, Nationalism and Public Health. Currently she is working on an intellectual history of population throughout the twentieth century.

RACHEL CANAWAY is a naturopathic practitioner with a long-standing interest in the history of western medicine. Rachel is currently investigating the development of the naturopathic profession in Victoria for her Master's thesis through the Centre for Health and Society at the University of Melbourne.

CAROLINE CLARK works at Turning Point Alcohol and Drug Centre in Melbourne where she teaches in its postgraduate program. She is also working on her PhD, a social and medical history of alcoholism in Australia, at the Centre for Health and Society, University of Melbourne.

CATHARINE COLEBORNE is a senior lecturer in history at the University of Waikato. She is currently working on a Marsden-funded project about Australasian colonial families and insane asylums between 1860 and 1914. Her publications include (with Dolly Mackinnon) 'Madness' in Australia (UQP, 2003) and the forthcoming Reading 'Madness' (API, 2005).

WENDY MADSEN is a lecturer in nursing at Central Queensland University. She has had an interest in the history of nursing for the past decade. Her Masters degree focused on nursing practice within the Rockhampton Hospital during the 1930s and 1940s. She has extended this interest as part of her doctoral studies (soon to be completed) by considering the development of nursing services in the Rockhampton region.

JANET McCALMAN teaches the history of medicine and the ecological history of humankind in the Department of History and Philosophy of Science, and history of public health at the Centre for Health and Society. Her current research is centred on two collaborative cradle-to-grave studies of working-class white and Indigenous health from the 1850s to the present day in Victoria.

BERNADETTE POWER is a lawyer who has worked on recent immigration law in Australia. She was a researcher on the ARC-funded project 'At the Border: Health, Immigration Restriction and the Imagining of Australia'.

JOHN C. WALLER is lecturer in the history of science and medicine in the Department of History and Philosophy of Science and the Centre for Health and Society at the University of Melbourne. His most recent books are Leaps in the Dark: The Forging of Scientific Reputations (OUP, 2004) and The Real Oliver Twist: The Story of Robert Blincoe, a Life that Illuminates an Age (Icon Books, 2005).

JOHN WEAVER is professor of history at McMaster University, Hamilton, Canada. His prior contributions to New Zealand historical writing have dealt with colonisation and property rights. He is the author of several books on the history of crime and land acquisition, including The Great Land Rush and the Making of the Modern World, 1650–1900 (2004).

DAVID WRIGHT holds the Hannah Chair in the History of Medicine and is associate professor in the Department of History and the Department of Psychiatry and Behavioural Neurosciences at McMaster University, Hamilton, Canada. He is the author and editor of several books on the history of mental health, including (with Roy Porter, ed.) The Confinement of the Insane: International Perspectives in 2003. Along with John Weaver, Jonathan Richards of Griffith University and South Pacific historian Douglas Munro he is working on a major project about the history of suicide in New Zealand and Australia.

SALLY WILDE is based in the School of History, Philosophy, Religion and Classics at the University of Queensland. She is the author of a number of books on aspects of Australia's social, economic and medical history and is currently working on the history of surgical ethics and patient experiences of surgery.

PETER WINTERTON is a foundation life member of the Australian Society of the History of Medicine. He is in general medical practice and is also the medical director of the Child Protection Unit at the Princess Margaret Hospital for Children in Perth. On completing his medical qualifications he undertook an Arts degree with a major in history. His special area of interest is ancient medical history and Nazi medicine and related topics. He has also published on aspects of Australian medical history.

PETER YULE is a research fellow of the History Department of the University of Melbourne. He has written histories of the Royal Children's Hospital and the Warrnambool Base Hospital as well as numerous local histories and business histories. His biography of Sir Ian Potter will be published by Melbourne University Press in March 2006.